

The owners of Harry, a large black and white cat, are very glad to have him back safe and sound after he had been missing for over three weeks.

George and Emma Jenkins moved to their new house at the end of June and took Harry with them. At first all went well but suddenly Harry disappeared.

“He seemed quite happy at the new house,” said George, “but after a few days he went missing. We were really worried about him when he didn’t come home one night. I took the next day off work in the hope that he would turn up but he didn’t.”

“We actually felt quite lonely without him!” said Emma. “For the first few days we were still putting out food for him every morning and clearing it away every evening.”

After a couple of weeks, George and Emma had given up hope and they began to get used to life without Harry. “We really thought we’d never see him again,” said Emma.

It was an incredible surprise for the couple when they received a phone call from Sally Barton. “Sally’s call came completely out of the blue,” said George. “She told us that Harry had popped in through the cat-flap!”

“Of course, what Harry had done was find his way all the way back to our old house over a hundred miles away! It took us about two hours in the car to go and fetch him so goodness knows how he made the journey. Harry’s amazing!” added Emma, giving Harry a big cuddle.

It remains a mystery how Harry found his way back to his old home in Somerset from his new home in Wiltshire. George and Emma are hoping that he will stay with them from now on but if he doesn’t, at least they will know where to look.
